

THROWN OUT OF HER UNION, GIRL SUES FOR $10,000

Katie Lee, Twice Expelled and Twice Restored, Appeals to the Courts.

NOT A TRADE WORKER.

Gave Up Garment Working for Stenography, and Therein Is Trouble.

"Your Honor," exclaimed ex-Justice Alfred Stecker to Justice O'Gorman, "they have been bounding this young woman for three years without cause. They have expelled her three times from the local and twice she has been restored to membership by the National Union Garment Workers of America. They would ruin her reputation and destroy her opportunities for making a decent living in her trade."

The subject of this statement was Miss Katie Lee, a small, frail, yellow-haired young woman who lives at No. 100 East Eighty-fifth street. She was suing Miss Margaret Daley, as President of Local No. 34, for reinstatement to the organization from which she said she was expelled on Miss Daley's charges, Miss Daley participating in her trial and voting for her dismissal. She also demands $10,000 damages and an injunction restraining Miss Daley and the union from interfering with her enjoyment of the privileges of membership.

Wanted to Be "Union."
Miss Lee testified that she had been out of actual work as a garment maker for some time, but reflecting that she might at any time be compelled to return to her trade, in which she was an acknowledged expert, she accepted Miss Daley's invitation to rejoin Local No. 34, of which the latter was president, and did join in 1906, and paid her dues—35 cents a month—for more than two years, during which time she was expelled three times.

"I was a stenographer at the time for one of the biggest clothing houses in the city," said Katie Lee. "But no one objected to that, as I was known as a garment worker, entitled to join the union. But in 1907 Miss Daley charged me with trying to disrupt Local No. 34 by organizing a new local in our factory. It was true, but they expelled me for it. Then they broke No. 34 in two, all the female members organizing Local No. 34. Margaret Daley, who had been President of No. 34, was elected President of the new local. She had also set up that I was a stenographer and all that. No. 34 was organized to get rid of me. Then Margaret Daley, a statuesque brunette and splendid foil for the blonde Miss Lee, testified.

Miss Daley's Defense.
"Miss Lee was not entitled to membership in our National organization because she was a stenographer. Yes, I told her she'd better come into our local as a garment worker, and she attended meetings. I hated to turn her down. She gave me a dollar to the secretary at an executive meeting where she had no right to be at all. Katie says to me, 'How about it, Margaret? Is that all right?' and I said, 'Yes, Katie.'"

"We had had trouble with the house she was stenographer for, and the members said it would be wrong for me to bring Miss Lee into the organization. 'You see, we were the only overall local in New York. We had a certain price set and we didn't want the new local which Miss Lee tried to organize in their factory. I did not vote on her expulsion. I was ordered out of the room when the vote was taken. 'Why, yes, I knew Katie Lee in Wappingers Falls. How long have I known her?'"

Eames's Indisposition Gives Rappold a Chance to Show Her Skill as Aida

Brooklyn Woman Makes a Creditable Appearance With Louise Homer, Caruso and Scotti in Verdi's Opera.

BY SILVESTER RAWLING.

"GOD moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

For a fortnight we have been saying farewell to Marcella Sembrich, the greatest artist of the operatic stage that the present generation has known. Herself a Pole, a quarter of a century of living with us has made her a good American. Associated with her for a great deal of the time has been Emma Eames, a native product from our cold, rock-ribbed State of Maine, of whom we are justly proud. The latter was too ill to add her beautiful presence to the official ceremonies of good-bye to Sembrich at the Metropolitan Opera-House on Saturday night, but she did manage to appear at the dinner tendered to the departing prima donna at the Hotel Astor on Sunday night by the musicians of the town.

That sacrifice, however, proved too much of a strain. Patrons of the Metropolitan Opera-House who went to hear Aida last night were confronted by this picture:

"In consequence of the sudden indisposition of Miss Emma Eames she will be unable to sing to-night. The role of Aida will be sung by Marie Rappold."

This gave to our Brooklyn compatriot her first appeal to the stage by her Queen of Sheba a chance to win new laurels before a crowded house. In spite of the fact that she showed the whites of her eyes and rolled them exasperatingly and that she kept her hands crossed over her breast in a slavish attitude unnatural to the daughter of the very Amazonas, she made a distinctly good impression, singing with fervor and acting with intelligence.

HIGH PRESSURE SAVES $1,000,000 AT FACTORY FIRE

Blaze in West Broadway Six-
Story Building Is Quickly Subdued.

Goods to the value of $1,000,000 were in danger of fire in a six-story factory building at No. 335 West Broadway at midnight when Chief Croker ordered six high pressure hoses turned on the blaze.

The water shot from the hose with the power of a battering ram, and when it looked as though the fire would spread to adjoining buildings the tongues of flame were forced back and practically confined to the floor on which they started.

The building at No. 335 West Broadway is occupied by the Kurshedt Manufacturing Company, and in the building were stored embroideries, silks, laces and linens.

Flames Shot Across Street.
Policeman Roberts, of the McDougal street station, discovered the fire when the front windows on the third floor had been broken by the heat and the flames were shooting half across the street.

The first alarm brought Croker, because of the danger of a fire in the neighborhood. The Chief sent in a second alarm. He did not need the engines, but he did need the hose and he needed the men. So the firemen rode to the scene of action on their engines and then the engines went out of commission.
